‘Petpreneurs’ barking up the right tree

Australia’s increasing interaction with household pets has spawned a robust small business industry.

From dog cafes and gourmet treats to animal shampoos and minding homes, enterprising “petpreneurs” are seizing the opportunity to cater to a whole range of creature comforts.

There are 25 million pets in Australia (two million more than the human population), and they have created a flourishing industry worth an estimated $8 billion a year.

One venture taking a bite out of the market is the Gourmet Dog Barkery in the NSW city of Newcastle. Specialising in dog treats, it is a cafe and bakery for our canine companions.

Cafe owner Lisa Haynes started making biscuits for her dog four years ago because there were not a lot of preservative-free healthy treats available.

“We started selling them online and at markets and soon realised that there was a demand.”

She makes more than 35 dog biscuit varieties, wheat-free doggy snack bars, plus a range of fresh cakes, sausage rolls, birthday cakes and birthday bones, with prices starting at $1 for fresh yoghurt-dipped peanut butter and banana mini doughnuts, going up to 1-kilogram bags of treats that sell for $40 each.

Haynes hopes to open five more stores in the next five years, with the central coast and Sydney on her radar.

In the meantime, our passion for pets is helping make the cash registers purr with satisfaction.
